

CONTRIBUTORS

Lorraine Coons is assistant professor of history and college archivist at Chestnut Hill College in Philadelphia. She holds an undergraduate degree from Georgian Court College in New Jersey and a master's degree and doctorate from New York University, where she earned a certificate in archives management and historical editing. Current research focuses on French and women's history, particularly French women's peace activism in the 1930s.

Bernd Frohmann is associate professor of library and information science at the University of Western Ontario. He holds undergraduate and master's degrees from the University of Toronto, and an M.L.S. and Ph.D. from the same institution. Areas of special interest are the political economy of information and discourse analysis of library and information science.

David J. Jones is building consultant at the State Library of New South Wales in Sydney, Australia, where he has been employed since 1970. He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at Oxford University and a Diploma of Librarianship and Ph.D. at the University of New South Wales. He serves as editor of LASIE: Library Automated Systems Information Exchange and has been active in library organizations in Australia. Publications include four editions of The Australian Dictionary of Acronyms and Abbreviations, The Australian Librarian's Manual, Australian Periodical Title Abbreviations, and A Source of Inspiration and Delight: The Buildings of the State Library of New South Wales since 1826. He also has written The Source Book: Reviews of Reference Material for Australian Libraries and Information Services and has contributed to the Australian Library Journal and InCite. Special interests include Australian library history and reference materials, and library planning and design.

Peter J. Wosh is director of the Archives Program at New York University. He had served previously as director of the archives and library at the American Bible Society. He holds an undergraduate degree in history from Rutgers University and a master's degree with a Certificate in Archival Management from New York University, where he also earned a Ph.D. in history. He is the author of Spreading the Word: The Bible Business in Nineteenth-Century America (Cornell University Press, 1994) and The Diocesan Journal of Michael Augustine Corrigan, Bishop of Newark, New Jersey, 1872-1880 (New Jersey Historical Society, 1987). He has written numerous articles on archives and nineteenth-century religious and social history, and is currently working on a study of religious resorts in modern America.

Mary Saracino Zboray is an independent scholar in Atlanta, Georgia. She holds a bachelor's degree in history from the University of Bridgeport, and a master's degree in anthropology from The New School for Social Research, and has done doctoral-level work in American studies at The George Washington University. She has collaborated with Ronald J. Zboray on several recent articles on books and reading, and is currently working with him on a book about publishing and reading in antebellum Boston and a directory of the book trades there from 1789–1861.

Ronald J. Zboray is associate professor of history at Georgia State University in Atlanta. He holds an undergraduate degree in history from the University of Bridgeport and an A.M. and Ph.D. in American civilization from New York University. He is the author of A Fictive People: Antebellum Economic Development and the American Reading Public (Oxford University Press, 1993) and a number of articles on books and reading, several of which were in collaboration with Mary S. Zboray. He is currently working with her on a book about publishing and reading in antebellum Boston and a directory of Boston book trades from 1789 to 1861.