

CONTRIBUTORS

Kayla Barrett is a descriptive services archivist at the Georgia Department of Archives and History in Atlanta, where she has worked since June 1996. She had previously been employed at the Auburn University Archives. She holds both undergraduate and master's degrees in history from Wichita State University in Kansas, and an MLIS from the University of Oklahoma.

Barbara A. Bishop is a government documents librarian at the Ralph Brown Draughon Library at Auburn University in Alabama, where she has worked since 1988. She holds an undergraduate degree in humanities from the University of South Florida in Tampa, where she also earned her master's degree in library science. She is currently revising a paper on the integration of the Alabama Library Association during the 1960s.

J. E. Traue is a teaching fellow in the Department of Library and Information Studies at the Victoria University of Wellington in New Zealand. He is a fellow of the New Zealand Library Association, with a diploma from the New Zealand Library School and a master's degree from the University of New Zealand. He serves as the vice-president of the Archives and Records Association of New Zealand and is interested in the history of libraries in New Zealand and the conceptual design of exhibitions of books and manuscripts.

Wayne A. Wiegand is a professor in the School of Library and Information Studies at the University of Wisconsin–Madison, where he has taught since 1987. He received a bachelor's degree in history at the University of Wisconsin–Oshkosh, a master's degree in history at the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee, and a Ph.D. in history at Southern Illinois University. He earned a master's in library science at Western Michigan University. A prolific author with over sixty scholarly articles to his credit, he is the author of five books, two of which were awarded the G. K. Hall Award for Outstanding Contribution to Library Literature. He also serves on the advisory board of Libraries & Culture. His most recent book, Irrepressible Reformer: A Biography of Melvil Dewey, was published in 1996 by the American Library Association and is reviewed in this issue of Libraries & Culture.