

CONTRIBUTORS

Evelyn Kerslake is a doctoral student in the Department of Information and Library Studies at Loughborough University in Leicestershire, England. She holds an undergraduate degree in English studies from the University of East Anglia and a master's in women's studies from Loughborough University. She has worked as a researcher at Loughborough University and is interested in the gendered structure of library employment, flexible working patterns in the information sector, and the social impact of public libraries.

Maxine K. Rochester served as associate professor in library and information science at the School of Information Studies, Charles Sturt University–Riverina, at Wagga Wagga, Australia, until August 1998. She holds an undergraduate degree from Sydney University, an M.L.S. from the University of Western Ontario, and a Ph.D. in library science from the University of Wisconsin–Madison. She served as a member of the Professional Board of IFLA, representing Division VII Education and Research, from 1993 to 1995. She edits Education for Library and Information Services: Australia, and has contributed to the library literature internationally and in Australia. Her most recent book is Education for Librarianship in Australia, published in 1997 by Mansell, London.

James R. Rohrer is assistant professor of religion at Northwestern College in Orange City, Iowa. He had taught previously at the Yuhan Theological College and Seminary and at the Presbyterian Bible College, both in Taiwan. He holds a bachelor's degree from Kent State University and a master's and doctorate from Ohio State University, as well as a master's degree in divinity from the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary. A specialist in both American religion and culture and Christianity in the non-Western world, he is especially interested in the popular appropriation of formal theological literature and in the impact of theological instruction upon culture.

Marek Sroka is assistant professor of library administration and Slavic cataloger at the Slavic and East European Library, the University of Illinois at Urbana–Champaign. He holds a B.A./M.A. in English language and literature from the University of Cracow, and an M.L.S. from the University of Illinois at Urbana–Champaign. He serves as a member of the Automated Bibliographic Control Committee in the Slavic and East European section of ALA. His interests focus on the history of Polish libraries and bibliographies, and the automation of Polish libraries; Slavic cataloging and bibliographic resources; and Ukrainian studies and collections in Poland and the United States.