

CONTRIBUTORS

Tom Glynn is a doctoral candidate in history at Auburn University in Alabama. He holds an undergraduate degree in history from the University of Chicago and an M.L.S. and a master's degree in history from the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee. He worked as a social sciences reference librarian at the Auburn University Libraries from 1995 until 1998. His dissertation in progress focuses on the history of six privately funded libraries and is entitled Books and the Public Sphere: New York City Libraries as Culture Building Institutions, 1764–1895.

Karen F. Gracy is a doctoral student in the Department of Information Studies at the University of California in Los Angeles. She holds an undergraduate degree in English and French from the University of California at Berkeley and an M.L.I.S. and a master's degree in film and television from U.C.L.A. Her research interests include the investigation of the processes and practices of cultural institutions. She is currently working on her dissertation, which is tentatively entitled The Imperative to Preserve: Competing Definitions of Value in Film Preservation.

Debra Gold Hansen is associate director of the San Jose State University School of Library and Information Science in Fullerton, California. She holds both a bachelor's degree in history and a master's degree in American history from California State University, Fullerton; an M.L.S. from the University of California, Los Angeles; and a Ph.D. in American social history from the University of California, Irvine. She is the author of Strained Sisterhood: Gender & Class in the Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society (University of Massachusetts Press, 1993) and "The Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society and the Limits of Gender Politics," in The Abolitionist Sisterhood: Antislavery and Women's Political Culture (Cornell University Press, 1991). She is currently working on a labor history of women librarians, 1880–1920, focusing on the Los Angeles Public Library.

Jean-Pierre V. M. Hérubel is a philosophy/history and art/design bibliographer, a reference librarian, and an associate professor of library science at Purdue University in West Lafayette, Indiana. He holds both bachelor's and master's degrees in history from Pennsylvania State University and an M.L.S. and Ph.D. in European history from Kent State University. His articles and reviews have appeared in various library and interdisciplinary journals, and he is the author of Annales Historiography and Theory.

A Selective and Annotated Bibliography (Greenwood Press, 1994). He also serves as a bibliographer for the semi-annual publication French Historical Studies. Areas of special interest include historiography and the philosophy of history, the history of disciplines, bibliometrics, and intellectual and cultural history.

Sheri D. Irvin is the project manager of Eastside Cybrary Connection in Riverside, California. She has an undergraduate degree in English literature from the University of California, Santa Barbara, and an M.L.I.S. from San Jose State University. She is active as an information literacy consultant and internet trainer, and served as vice president of the California Library History Round Table in 1998–99. She is the co-author of “Interactive Video and Female Learning: Implications for a Feminized Profession,” in Feminist Collections 17 (Winter 1996).

Brian Lang is the Chief Executive of the British Library, a position he has held since 1991. He holds a master’s degree and a Ph.D. from the University of Edinburgh, and has conducted social anthropological field research in Kenya as well as lecturing in social anthropology at Aarhus University. He has served as secretary for the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland (1979–80) and for the National Heritage Memorial Fund (1980–1987). He also was the director of public affairs for the National Trust from 1987 to 1991. His outside interests include music, museums, and galleries.

Bette W. Oliver is the assistant editor of Libraries & Culture, a position she has held since 1986. She has undergraduate and master’s degrees in journalism and a master’s degree and Ph.D. in European history from The University of Texas at Austin. She has written on topics related to cultural history in late-eighteenth-century France and has presented papers at the Society for French Historical Studies, the Western Society for French History, the American Society for Eighteenth-Century Studies, and the Consortium on Revolutionary Europe, 1750–1850. In addition to articles and book reviews, she is the author of four volumes of poetry. Current research and writing focuses on the eighteenth-century Parisian art dealer Jean-Baptiste Pierre LeBrun and his contributions to the development of the modern museum.